Page 24 — Stock Control and Ordering Notes

Product handling

- Ambient grocery products should be stored in dry areas protected from direct sunlight.
- Cans with visible swelling, severe dents along seams, leakage, or corrosion must be placed on quality hold.
- Glass jars with broken seals, leakage, or damaged lids must not be allocated to customer orders.
- Chocolate and heat-sensitive products should be stored away from warehouse heating systems.
- Products with short remaining shelf life should be allocated according to the applicable first-expiry, first-out process.
- Opened consumer-returned food products must not be returned to saleable inventory.

Catalogue maintenance

Product records should be reviewed when any of the following occurs:

1. Supplier changes formulation, pack size, or allergen declaration.
2. Product certification changes or expires.
3. The product is removed from the supplier's active range.
4. Warehouse allocation changes.
5. Price or VAT treatment changes.
6. Packaging artwork no longer matches the stored product record.

Discontinued-product procedure

Products marked “This product has been discontinued” should not be included in new replenishment orders. Residual units may be sold only while the product remains within its best-before period and its packaging is intact. Customer-facing availability should be updated to prevent orders being placed against zero or quarantined stock.
